... century ago, the Daughters of the American Revolution marked Daniel Boone's Trail from 1912 to 1915, erecting 45 bronze tablets across 400 miles through North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and Kentucky, the path that enabled America's western movement. The tablets by marking the trail began in North Carolina.

A historic public gathering to dedicate each tablet, including the joint ceremony at Cumberland Gap attended by Democrats. The project took place against a backdrop of the Progressive Era, including presidential elections, campaigns for equal rights, war in Europe, and opening the Panama Canal.
